AN IOWA SNOW-STORM.

The Way it Snowed in that State Twenty Years Ago.

The biggest and most severe snow-storm ever known in this part of the country, within the recollection of our oldest inhabitants, came on in 1856, twenty years ago yesterday. It extended over the greater part of Iowa, a portion of Nebraska and Dakota. The storm prevailed for two days and two nights, during which time it was almost impossible for a person to see half way across a street, and a portion of the time the snow is represented as having come down in such solid sheets as to effectively conceal from view one's hand held at arm's length before his own eyes. The first day after the storm closed the wind shifted to the north and blew a perfect gale, drifting the snow badly and forming a crust upon it of sufficient strength to bear the weight of a man easily enough.

This region of country was quite new twenty years ago, and wild game of all kinds was very plenty. Directly after the snow storm above alluded to, the settlers started on the hunt after deer. The snow was deep and the crust so severely heavy enough to bear the weight of the deer, and when pursued they sought escape in flight, and they would break through the snow crust and make very little progress. The only weapons the settlers used when hunting the deer at that particular time were an ax and knife—when the former used in knocking the game down, and the latter in severing the jugular. In this manner the settlers supplied themselves with a sufficient amount of venison to last their families for several months.

After the heavy storm referred to, Sioux City was completely blocked out from communication with any point, and it was five weeks before a stage could get through with any of the mail. L. E. Graber, brother-in-law of Mr. John L. E. Graber, who at that time was a stage man, had the contract for carrying mails between Sioux City and Council Bluffs, and for some days after the severe storm abated he had a hard time of getting his route opened. He took a number of yoke of cattle, and for several days used them in tramping down the huge drifts on the Missouri bottom in the vicinity of Sergeant Bluffs, finally succeeding in making a road over which the stage could pass.

Many amusing anecdotes are related by one of our old settlers as having occurred during that fearful blizzard. We will mention a single one. Gen. Leach, then Receiver of the United States Land Office here, started from his office, a log cabin, standing where now stands H. D. Rooge & Co.'s wholesale building, to his residence on upper Douglas street. The General lost his hat immediately on venturing out of doors, but he laughed at the tury of the storm and kept on.

There were at the time four or five buildings standing either on Fourth or Douglas streets, and there were not many visible landmarks for the General to follow in the teeth of the storm for a considerable time, he found himself lost to bank down near where the Chicago House now stands. This was a fearful situation. The Board of Trustees of Water-works informed the Council that hereafter they would charge full rates to all consumers, on the ground of Mr. Hallam's opinion (already published,) and for other reasons. The report was received and filed without debate. Adjourned.

In those days the few settlers in Sioux City had accumulated considerable stock about them, but the cattle were all provided with shelter. They stood huddled up in groups, and when they became thirsty they strayed in search of water toward the river. The snow had drifted badly along the bank, and many head of cattle plunged into these drifts in their effort to reach the water and were lost, their bodies not being discovered until the break-up the following spring. Many mules were also lost in the same manner.—[Sioux City Journal.]

KILLED IN A THEATER.

The Husband of Fanny Garretson Shot. About 9 o'clock on Thursday evening the audience of the Bella Union Varieties was startled by the sudden exit of the performers and the sight of an ax thrown from the auditorium to the stage. A man was seen attempting to mount the stage and almost immediately with this movement Dick Brown, one of the performers, came from behind the wings and fired four shots from a revolver, saying: "He has followed me long enough." The man who had thrown the ax fell.

An examination was made as to the extent of his injuries, and two bullet holes were found upon his person, one of the projectiles having entered the right arm and the other had penetrated the right side above the hip. The wounded man, who was identified as Edward Saughnessy, was taken to the drug store of McKinney & Phillips, where he was attended by Dr. Devins. Subsequently he was removed to Wagner's Hotel, where restoratives were administered by the attending physician.

Saughnessy lingered until about 5 o'clock yesterday morning, when death put an end to his sufferings. Up to the time of our going to press, there had been but very little testimony adduced before the Court of Investigation; but from what we have been able to learn, some time ago Saughnessy became acquainted with an actress known as Fanny Garretson, who was at that time playing at Mr. McDonald's Theater in Cheyenne.

Saughnessy was employed at the time by the Union Pacific Railroad Company, and up to the time of his meeting Garretson, was known to be a very exemplary young man. The fire which killed him was kindled by the fire of the 4th day of July, 1876, closed the theatrical season for the time being, and Garretson went to Laramie City to fill an engagement. At that place she and Saughnessy were legally married.

After living together some six months a rupture occurred between the twain, and Miss Garretson went to the Pacific coast. She afterward returned, however, made up the quarrel, and for a short time again lived with Saughnessy. She subsequently left him and started for the Black Hills. She arrived in this city about three weeks ago, in company with Dick Brown, the two having been engaged by Tom Miller to play at the Bella Union Varieties. Shortly after their arrival they were married by Max Farman, and have since lived together.

It appears that Saughnessy, crazed by the desertion of his wife, followed her to this place, and when he discovered her liaison with Brown, threatened vengeance upon the heads of both. As he had been drinking deeply, his friends thought such talk was only the wild ravings of a brain under the influence of liquor, and heeded them not until the sad results which we have chronicled had occurred. A post-mortem examination showed that the ball entered just above the right hip, passing over the pelvic bone through the intestines, rupturing them, and then entering the lungs, and finally the brain, and causing the public glands, from which place it was removed by the physicians.—[Black Hills Pioneer.]
